International Arbitration Summer Program

The Washington College of Law International Commercial Arbitration Program has developed an intensive three-week summer program designed to prepare the legal profession to respond to the widespread use of international arbitration for the resolution of disputes in international business and economic transactions.

Taught by leading practitioners and arbitrators from throughout the world, the International Arbitration Summer Program focuses on theoretical and practical aspects of international arbitration and provides insights on the practice of international arbitration and the handling of arbitration cases.

Courses are designed to meet the complex needs and busy schedules of practicing attorneys. Students will gain first-hand knowledge of the complexities of international commercial arbitration and earn up to five credits during the three-week period. Visiting students can apply to use these credits toward an LLM degree from the Washington College of Law.

The program is open to practitioners for a Certificate of Attendance and Continuing Legal Education (CLE) credit. JD and LLM candidates can earn academic credit.

“I am pleased to announce the 2009 International Arbitration Summer Program. The program offers participants a unique opportunity to learn from world-renowned practitioners and arbitrators while having the opportunity to network with practitioners and students from around the globe.”
