COMPUTER USE AND TECHNOLOGICAL FACILITIES

You may do research using Lexis, Westlaw, CALI and the internet. However, editing papers and checking email is not permitted at these stations.

The Washington College of Law has designed its computer system to enable students to take maximum advantage of computers and the Internet. As one of the most "wired" law schools in the United States, WCL maintains a computer lab as well as laptop accessibility throughout its building. Our goal is to allow students to access the resources, data, and cutting edge technology that will enable them to distinguish themselves in both the academic and professional arenas. Proficiency with computer technology and an understanding of the Internet is a necessity in most professional fields and will only become more significant in the future.

The computer resources at WCL have been optimized to fit the needs of law students. The network connection is available in the classrooms and the library, and student computers are available in the computer lab. The lab maintains 52 PC workstations and 21 Macintosh PowerPC terminals. Students can also utilize the two HP 8000 laser printers in the lab or access the laser printers in the library via their own laptops. These resources allow for access to the Internet, to personalized e-mail accounts, and to the network printing system.

If you wish to use your own laptop, please connect to the wireless network named Visitor. The username is practitioner and the password is summer09.

How to Login/Logout

As you sit down at a PC there will be a login window with two fields on information for you to fill in. Circulation desk staff will give you the necessary information to log onto the library computers.

Once you have finished work at your computer station, please make sure to logout. To do so go to the "Start Menu" and select "Close all programs and log on as a different user". This will detach your account from the network, allowing you to log on in the future.

WCL WALKING TOUR

The John Sherman Myers & Alvina Reckman Myers Law Center is our state-of-the-art facility located in the nation’s capital. WCL first occupied this six-story, 185,000 square foot building in January 1996. This date coincided with our 100-year anniversary. The Law Center’s designers studied 30 other law schools in order to create the most effective legal learning environment. This facility incorporates classrooms and courtrooms equipped with modern technology but also fosters more informal exchanges between students and faculty with its open meeting spaces and lounge areas on each level.

The visitor guide describes the points of interest throughout the building. Enjoy this self-guided tour, and please feel free to ask students, faculty or staff questions about the building or their experiences. You will find that there are few other prestigious law schools so comfortable and friendly.

FIRST FLOOR

Los Pobres del Mundo and Shiffman Classrooms, Room 100 and Room 101

Both of these classrooms are used primarily for first- and second- year required classes.

Legal Writing Center, Suite 129

This suite houses the offices for the Legal Method program. As you enter this suite you will notice the glassed-in reception area. This part of the suite houses offices for our three full-time legal writing instructors. Instead of entering the reception area, continue down the main hallway. This space includes a multi-purpose conference room and meeting offices for our adjunct-writing instructors. From the main hallway in this suite you can access the National Equal Justice Library.

National Equal Justice Library

WCL was selected to become the national archive for the nation's 120 year-old legal services movement due to our reputation for legal services work through our renowned clinical law program. The archive includes publications, records, books, case notes and artifacts to chronicle the history and development of the legal services movement. Please exit this suite, walk through the lobby towards the elevators and enter the Law Library.

The Law Library

As you walk in, turn left to enter the Reserve Room. This room is patterned after the Library of Congress, so that individuals may research freely among numerous reference books, law treaties, government publications, and microfiche. The library offers an in-house collection of almost half a million volumes, plus access to a vast amount of information in digital format. Most of the library seating is equipped with data port access for laptop computer use through which students have unlimited access to WestLaw, Lexis/Nexis and the Internet. The library contains 17 iMac computer research stations located on the first and second floors. A student convenience center is located in Room 104 of the library. This center houses copiers, fax machines and various other supplies to assist student needs. During the 2000 fall semester a new large study room was added on the first floor of the library.

The Goodman Rare Book Room, Room 121

Located on the first floor of the library, this priceless collection includes over 250 volumes of early American and English legal texts, including the first American edition of William Blackstone's Commentaries, a 1531 edition of Registrum Brevium (believed to be the first English law book printed from movable type), and the first edition of Oliver Wendell Holmes' The Common Law, published in 1881.

SECOND FLOOR

The entire second floor encompasses the computer lab, library holdings, and study areas. Walk up the main library staircase to the second floor.

Computer Lab

The lab is located at the back of the second floor behind the first set of bookshelves. The lab contains 50 student workstations and is staffed by a full-time lab manager and part-time student workers. Keep walking - get a feel for the expansiveness and openness of the library. There is ample space for studying individually or in groups, including spacious study rooms. Exit the library and take the elevators to the third floor.

All of the room's furniture is mobile - allowing classes to simulate any court decor.

Clinic Offices and Work Areas, Suite 417

The Clinical Program functions similarly to a law firm. WCL's top ranked clinical program offers eight clinics ranging from international human rights law to tax law.

It is important that we do not disturb the clinics. You can view the student attorney's workspace from the windows along the hallway by Suite 417. Please note that half of the fourth floor is dedicated to the clinic area and contains the following:

Take the stairs and follow signs to Room 603. This is one of the largest rooms in the building, capable of seating 150-200 observers. It is used as a competition courtroom and a conference center. When Supreme Court Justices Rehnquist and Ginsburg came to WCL, they spoke in this room. Their speeches were televised live in the room next door and throughout the building on our TV monitors located all over the building.

Dr. Louis P. Levitt Lecture Hall, Room 602

This large lecture hall seats 150 students. It is used for classes and conference events. Continue past this classroom, make a right and walk down the hallway.

As with most of the 6th floor, the premier space in the building is reserved for student use. Each journal office has large meeting/editing areas.

Student Lounges

This study and social area contains your student mailboxes and announcement boards. It is also where we host our lunches with the Director. This gives students a chance to talk to the director about student issues in a relaxed setting. Otherwise, here the students may relax or study, find out about social and organizational events, or prepare for class.

Dining Hall

This area is used for daily meals and special events. It is common to see faculty and students eating together. Bon Appetit prepares three meals a day. Students can purchase food with either a meal card or cash. This area is also open for studying and often students bring food from home or from local sandwich shops. The dining room is also where we host our International Food Fairs and the Fall Embassy Receptions.
