

Egon Guttman is professor of law and Levitt Memorial Trust Scholar, Emeritus. He holds expertise in corporate and commercial law, especially securities regulation and broker-dealer customer relations. His expertise in commercial law includes sales, secured transactions, negotiable instruments and other payment devices such as letters of credit and bank collection. As a member of the American Law Institute (ALI) and the American Bar Association (ABA), Professor Guttman has been involved in the revisions of various Articles of the Uniform Commercial Code, and as a member of U.S. Department of State Working Groups in the drafting of conventions relating to international commercial transactions. One of the areas of his expertise is in problems of international aspects of capital-raising. He is fluent in German. Professor Guttman is the author of Modern Securities Transfers, Volume 28 & 28A of the Securities Law Series (Thomson-West Publications (updated to 2005), and of two recent case books : Secured Transactions Under the Uniform Commercial Code and International Commerce (Anderson Publishing Company, 2002) and Sales Under the Uniform Commercial Code and the International Convention on the Sale of Goods (Lexis-Nexis 2006).