WELCOME FROM THE WASHINGTON COLLEGE OF LAW

We at WCL welcome you to Washington. The work that you will engage in this week is among the most worthwhile that can be undertaken: protecting the human rights and dignity of others. This law school, under the direction of Claudio Grossman—a renowned international humanitarian—enjoys a reputation for our support of such work.

From sponsorship of the Center for Human Rights, to representation of disadvantaged clients through our clinical programs, to continual encouragement of our students to engage in volunteer humanitarian activities, we seek daily to maintain our commitment. Therefore we value our role in your endeavors to protect prisoners from the dehumanizing effects of sexual harassment and violation. We hope that your work this week will equip you with the necessary tools to ensure you every success upon your return to your home institutions.

Again, we applaud you for your commitment to protecting human rights. We invite you to a dinner reception on Tuesday, March 11, 2003, at 5:30 p.m. at the Washington College of Law to honor the commitment you have made.

Sincerely,

Robert Dinerstein
Associate Dean
