Elections provide unparalleled opportunities to voice your concerns to candidates in public office – from city council to President. Now, more than ever, candidates listen because they want your vote.

With the presidential election just around the corner, a number of student groups will hold an interactive debate on the two political parties' platforms on health care issues. Democrat and Republican representatives will face off by presenting their political parties' health platforms and answering questions from student leaders.

This interactive debate offers an opportunity for students to learn about the political parties' health platforms and pose tough questions to Bush and Kerry health policy advisors.
