

SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT LAW & POLICY PUBLICATION

EXPLORING HOW TODAY'S DEVELOPMENT AFFECTS FUTURE GENERATIONS AROUND THE GLOBE

Call for Papers Climate Law Reporter

Sustainable Development Law and Policy ("SDLP") is currently accepting submissions for its Winter 2011 Climate Law Reporter, focusing on the latest advancements in climate law. If you would like to submit an article for consideration, please send your paper or a summary of your topic to sdlp@wcl.american.edu. The deadline for submission of final articles is January 10, 2011.

SDLP's Climate Law Reporter is produced every year and provides a forum for practitioners to discuss the legal, social, and political currents in climate law. Ideal topics include, but are not limited to:

- UNFCCC Cancun negotiations
- climate and the Obama administration
- climate change and the Clean Air Act
- carbon regulation and trading
- climate change litigation
- regional climate initiatives
- voluntary carbon reduction programs
- human rights and climate
- climate change and national security
- climate legislation

SDLP aims to represent a range of viewpoints, including those from academia, the private sector, public sector, multilateral organizations, and others. Please view our recent issues at www.wcl.american.edu/org/sdlp.

Requirements for Submissions:

- Articles or abstracts should be submitted to sdlp@wcl.american.edu.
- Articles should be between 3,000 to 5,000 words.
- Articles should be submitted electronically in Microsoft Word or a Word-compatible software program.
- All articles should attempt to follow the format presented in previous issues of SDLP. This includes an introduction, which outlines the rest of the article, and a conclusion. Please refer to recent issues for examples.
- Please provide complete citations to every fact, opinion, statement, and quote that is not your original idea. Complete citations include: the name and author of the cited document, title of publication or publisher, date of publication, relevant page numbers, and specific website address. SDLP uses Bluebook format for all citations.
- We encourage the submission of photographs and graphics to accompany your article. Please send proof of permission to use others' images.
- Please include a 3-4 sentence biography of yourself and indicate whether you would like your email address included with the published article.

We reserve the right to reject submissions at any time or for any reason. We also reserve the right to hold all submissions on file for later publication and reserve the right to revise your submission and/or cut text. You will have the opportunity to accept or reject any revisions. SDLP accepts submission of timely articles that have already been published elsewhere, so long as permission of the previous publisher is received.

SDLP is available online at LexisNexis, Westlaw, VLex and Hein Online and is widely distributed throughout the Washington, DC community, law and graduate schools, and to representatives of international organizations worldwide. You can also view the .pdf versions of recent SDLP issues at our website.
