The New Israel Fund (NIF) and American University Washington College of Law (WCL) established the Israel-U.S. Civil Liberties Law Program in 1984 to develop a cadre of dedicated and well-trained lawyers to promote human rights and justice in Israel. Now in its 23rd year, the program has become a mainstay of Israel's progressive legal and non-profit community, with graduates now working on diverse aspects of human rights advocacy. The program provides intensive exposure to both the theory and practice of human rights law. Participating attorneys spend one year in the United States, obtaining a Master's in Human Rights Law (LL.M.) from WCL and serving internships with American public interest groups such as the American Civil Liberties Union, the Washington Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights, and the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund, Inc. They then return to Israel and spend their second year working full-time with Israeli public interest organizations with a stipend funded by NIF. Recent Law Fellows have worked at a wide range of organizations, including: Adalah - the Legal Center for Arab Minority Rights; ACRI - the Association for Civil Rights in Israel, IRAC - the Israel Religious Action Center, and others
