

IS ONLINE LEARNING RIGHT FOR ME?

Did you know...

WCL offers online J.D., LL.M., and certificate courses?

most of these courses are taught by the same excellent faculty who teach in-residence J.D. courses?

the Department of Education and the American Bar Association have both conducted research and have found that students learn as much (or maybe a little more) online than they do in traditional brick-and-mortar classrooms?

online courses typically offer more opportunities to receive & apply feedback from your instructors throughout the course?

Online learning is different! There are unique challenges and benefits. Take the self-assessment on the back side of the page to determine if online learning is right for you.

ONLINE LEARNER READINESS SELF-ASSESSMENT

- I have reliable access to a computer with a high-speed Internet connection, a webcam and microphone for simple multimedia participation, and a quiet place to study.
- I am usually able to stay on task and avoid distractions (texting, social media, online shopping) while studying.
- I am good at planning and managing my time so that my work is on time and complete.
- Devoting a regular 10-12 hours per week per class is possible for me.
- I can learn from a variety of formats (readings, lectures, videos, podcasts, online discussion/conferencing).
- I am a self-motivated and autonomous learner.

While the increased flexibility of online courses may seem appealing to everyone, not everyone may be suited to online learning -- maybe you simply wouldn't enjoy the online platform, or technology makes you nervous. But most importantly, online courses require substantial self-discipline and cater to students who have well-developed time-management skills.
